Second opinion

Customer

$95 billion global aerospace company

Problem

Second-opinion benefits were being used by employees with common, everyday ailments rather than those likely to require high-cost care for conditions such as back pain and cancer. This was caused by an inability to target sub-populations likely headed for major treatment who could benefit from a second opinion.

Goal

Increase second-opinion utilization for members at high risk for back, knee, hip, and neck surgeries, decreasing the expense of costly surgeries when better options exist.

Our approach

Generate target member list using high-volume claims data and predictive algorithms with engagement messaging guided by behavioral science.

Outcomes

59 members

used second-opinion service for musculoskeletal conditions

$2.1 million

avoided in unnecessary treatments*

10 members

used second-opinion service for prostate and breast cancers

$360,000

avoided in unnecessary treatments*
